

Key Techniques to Reduce Severe Injection Site Reactions

VIVITROL® (naltrexone for extended-release injectable suspension)

Intramuscular Injection

- Use appropriate VIVITROL needle to ensure the injection reaches the gluteal muscle

Select the 2-inch needle for patients with more subcutaneous adipose tissue. Select the 1 ½-inch needle for patients with less subcutaneous adipose tissue. Use either needle for patients of average body habitus.

- Use aseptic technique when administering VIVITROL intramuscularly

Using a circular motion, clean the injection site with the alcohol swab. Let it dry before injection. Do not touch this area again before giving the injection.

- Use proper deep intramuscular injection technique into gluteal muscle

VIVITROL must NOT be given intravenously, subcutaneously, or into adipose tissue.

Inadvertent subcutaneous injection of VIVITROL may increase the likelihood of severe injection site reactions.

1. Administer the suspension by deep intramuscular injection into the upper, outer quadrant of a gluteal muscle, alternating buttocks per monthly injection. Remember to aspirate for blood before injection.
2. If blood aspirates or the needle clogs, do not inject. Change to the spare needle provided in the carton and administer into an adjacent site in the same gluteal region, again aspirating for blood before injection.
3. Inject the suspension in a smooth and continuous motion.
